VOLUME 2, ISSUE 11.

November 2007

Dear WRGN Supporters,

November, and we welcome the association of the Research into Lost Knowledge Organisation (R.I.L.K.O), Angel Light and the Sturminster Newton Reiki Share Group with the Network. November also heralds the arrival of Carol Fraser from India who will be conducting a series of talks and workshops at Sherborne and Taunton.

The new www.wessexresearchgroup.org web site continues to evolve and all feedback is welcomed. From Pisces to Aquarius by Chris Turner is the latest addition to the on-line digital lecture archive, with Ancient Wisdom for Today by Canon Peter Spink a new edition to the on-line article archive.

Dying is an Art

Funerals are not only about bereavement - a sort of distant counselling service for those left behind, who will themselves also die one day. They are about honouring the deceased and the life that person has lived and as such have been a vital part of life for, as far as we can tell, recordable time. But more than this, funerals are a way of expressing the sacredness of being human - whether we have a faith in an after-life (Our own Wessex collection of afterlife slides give one glimpse of such a possibility) or hold the humanist approach that this life is all there is.

Following a death, nurses and care workers in hospitals and hospices or nursing homes will often feel compelled to send representation; neighbours and slight acquaintances join family and friends to pay their respects and share times spent with the deceased with those present - often with some surprises. If we have a spiritual belief we also may use this opportunity to pray for the safe transit of their soul.

So, if the funeral is so much a part of life and life's acknowledgement, why do we so often leave it until the last moment to plan; or hand it over to others to decide the ceremony's form? Births and wedding celebrations are prepared way in advance. The promise of a life to come or a life to be shared is no more important, surely, than a life lived? And what an opportunity to put right old hurts, complete unfinished business, say the loving things we need to say, than in preparing for no longer being together - maybe even sharing fears and hopes for that moment of transition?

Releasing some of the fear and taboo around the subject of death is a key aim of the Martinsey Isle Trust. We have begun this process by opening dialogue in a place of safety with others empathic to this exploration and supported always by a professional in end of life education or care. We use "The Arts" - theatre, music and visual arts; green issues and workshops with children on the cycle of life and death and regeneration - along side our more overt workshops and talks - as a less threatening introduction to this now sensitive and often uncomfortable subject, so that it will never be "too late" for anyone. No more: "I wish I had known what he wanted." No more: "Did we do the right thing by her?" No more: "I wish I'd known more about him, talked more, listened, said I love him, asked if he was frightened or needed to tell me anything." Then perhaps we too can get on with our own grieving process, more informed and more at peace than otherwise would have been possible.

Theatrical Review - Colder Than Here by Laura Wade

Dramatic prose, sensitivity, mordant humour and delicately drawn characters combine to portray the sometime horrors and the gifts of death, as bereavement causes the members of a dysfunctional family to communicate together, perhaps for the first time. Sibling rivalry, the generation gap between parent and progeny and green issues are all covered by this amazing young playwright, not yet thirty when she wrote this play - performed in London and America on the professional stage and now being toured by us in an amateur capacity. If you believe in its importance as we do, please join us. Your support is needed to show the viability of this work by coming along to the London performance and workshop on November 16. For further information contact Judith, (tel. 01258 475125) or log on to www.martinsey.org.uk

Book Review - Contacts from the Fourth Dimension by MARK-AGE.

Contacts from the Fourth Dimension, is a compilation of hierarchical communications received by Nada-Yolanda from mid 2001 through mid 2005. These inter dimensional communications offer the necessary spiritual tools to remain steady with the light and to counterbalance the horrendous karmic cleansings with time-honoured techniques to heal and to enlighten humanity, during the challenging days of the last great battle of Armageddon. For further information about the book log on to www.thenewearth.org/markage.html

Book Review – Music and Numbers through the Looking Glass by Lui Di Martino

A mirror universe, or a mirror plane of existence? This is the theme explored within this book, that considers the role (and mirror role) of Number cycles, the Phi ratio, the Fibonacci numbers, musical scales, harmonics, Colour, I-Ching and Binary, the Mayan calendar, and prime numbers.

What is unearthed is that the mirror side shares information with this side, and the two sides form one whole equation leading to the one overall conclusion that a Merkaba structure resides at the heart of natural cycles.

In order to fully understand Nature according to the many cycles (including the nature of spin and vortexes) we need to unveil the formula and the cycle fully. When this is done, Nature shows that perfect symmetry, as held within a Merkaba structure, is the only result to emerge. Carl Jung talked of the marriage of the male/female, and this concept is no stranger to Nature, as this is exactly the manifestation of its overall expression. For more information about this book email Lui Di Martino at lggl007@ntlworld.com or log on to <http://homepage.ntlworld.com/lggl007>

A-Z of the Esoteric Being.

Group Thought – The psychic power engendered by a number of people mentally and emotionally bound in a common purpose. “When several persons meet together in a sacred place they powerfully move to sympathy the forces of the supernatural spheres by their common devotion. Men and women bound in such communion are said to form a psychic group-field and create forces that work on the physical situation and bring about spiritual and material change in their environment” Avicenna (d. 1037)
