August 2009

August and a welcome to Sheila Applegate from the USA who will be speaking in Glastonbury. We also welcome the Dorchester Pagan Moot, and the Celtic Dowzers who are comprised of dowsing groups in Devon and Cornwall.

In addition to a listing of events for the month ahead this edition of the network newsletter contains articles, book reviews and news of two new projects; www.holisticmap.org and an Australian based on-line survey researching the experiences of spiritual practitioners.

Reincarnation and the Evolution of Consciousness by Pat Law is the latest addition to the on-line digital lecture archive, with the Gatekeeper Trust by Roma Harding the latest addition to the on-line article archive.

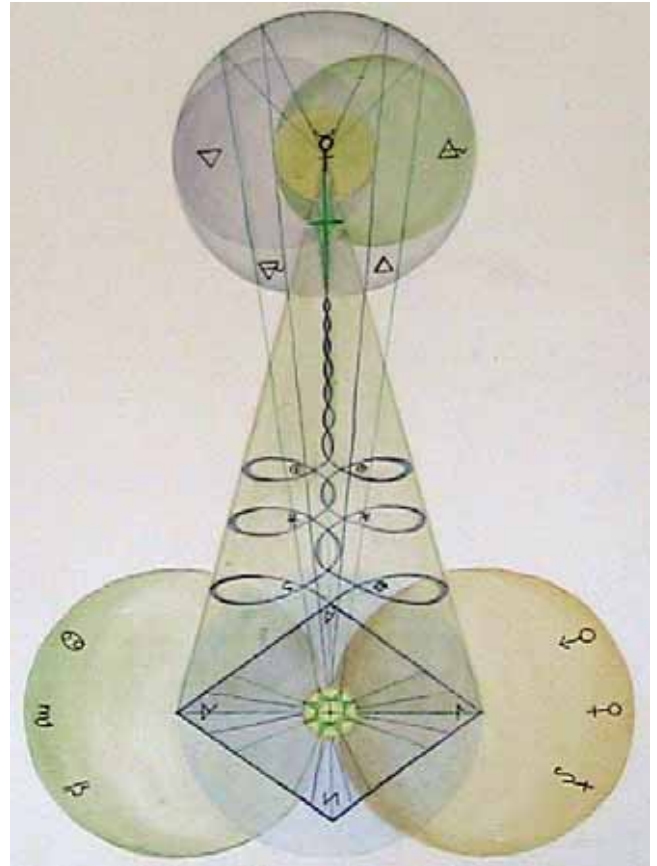

The Timeless and Subtle Nature of Energy

by Miroslav Provod

It has been empirically proven that megaliths were built for the purpose of electricity accumulation but our lack of understanding of static electricity leaves us with many unanswered questions about the way in which they were used. The existence of hundreds of thousands of megaliths sited around the Earth might suggest an ancient knowledge of a planetary grid of energy. Static electricity is a natural force that is part of all matter and the fact that we don't fully understand its characteristics should be a hint that something has escaped our attention in this area.

We shouldn't assess history in view of our existing knowledge, because it may lead us to wrong conclusions. An example would be language barriers. If dolmens, logan stones, clay mounds, pyramids and other structures were built across the globe, it has to be explained how the information needed to build them was transferred across the oceans, spreading to hundreds of thousands of places across all continents. This can't be answered. The correct answer is hidden in the yet unknown properties of static electricity. We may learn from this and direct our thoughts in a way that we can also learn something from the people that lived in past times.

It's easier to understand megalithic structures if we look at them as connected groups. On the island of Sardinia, many circular structures were built from boulders without malt of differing sizes and were called Nuraghas. These were built in the Bronze Age and 7,000 have been preserved, despite nobody having defined their purpose.

Above: The integration of cosmic wisdom and hyperborian forces that will take place in the Aquarian Age. Picture courtesy of J Risdon

Another unexplained mystery are the 40,000 circular structures in Ireland. All of those have similar architecture, but they differ in their degree of segmentation and therefore by their mass in the same way as the Nuraghas on Sardinia. Similar structures are also located on Aran Islands where the largest of them has an area the size of a few football pitches. It is composed of four mounds that are 1.7 meters high and five meters wide. There are thousands of spiky stone blocks with sharp edges (suction by a point) between the third and fourth mound, which are about as high as the rampart. In our current view there is no obvious purpose for their construction.

Erich von Daniken put forward the idea of connection between megalithic structures with the remnants of the Great Zimbabwe reminding us that we currently know of about one hundred and fifty similar places. I tend to agree with Erich von Daniken and would like to suggest that they were built for the purpose of interconnecting the etheric raster, which is energy conducting and so used to transfer information or energy. The Timeless and Subtle Nature of Energy is continued on Page 4.

Book Review: London's Camelot and the Mysteries of the Grail

By Chris Street

The Grail Legends embody a mystery and a living tradition of wisdom and knowledge which is encoded in the land and its ancient sacred sites.

There is a moated isle hidden in woods on the outskirts of London which bears the name of Arthur's legendary Court Camelot. Records prove it was known as Camelot at least thirty years before Mallory's Morte D'Arthur made the name famous. Moreover, an expert in local place names is on record as stating that the name Camelot here "is indisputably Celtic."

Archaeological digs have revealed a massive drawbridge, stone walls over five feet thick and a dungeon, plus Roman remains. The place has intriguing associations with the GrailLegends and is as much a place of magic and mystery as the mythical Camelot. It has a Holy Well, where apparitions of a Guinever-like "White Lady" have been reported and it is regarded as a place of healing, vision and inspiration by many visitors.

Is this the real Camelot? Was Arthur's sword-in-the-stone in London? Is it still there, built into a wall? These questions and many others are answered between the pages of this remarkable book which is a real voyage of discovery into our mythic and visionary landscapes. The Timeless and Subtle Nature of Energy (continued)

Every similar piece of information inspires us towards further new pieces of knowledge and we can draw conclusions about the subtle effects of energy on living organisms. Czech scientists have proved that the area beneath and up to 50 metres away from high voltage electricity lines, influences the behavior of animals. Research has shown that herds of cattle, deer or roe-deer naturally sleep and eat in such a posture that their bodies are aligned in a north-south orientation. When positioned under or close to high voltage wires this pattern of behaviour changes and they begin to stand in a way that their body is randomly aligned. As soon as they go away from the high voltage wires, they eat and sleep in a north-south orientation again. Prof. Hynek Burda from Essen concluded that if an animal behaves in a different way to its normal behavior under high voltage wires, there must undoubtedly be changes on its brain, at a cellular and molecular level.

The negative influence of the high voltage lines may be seen not only in animals but also in humans. My own research suggests an increased occurrence of traffic accidents on a road where a high voltage line, runs alongside it for a distance of tens of kilometers. The distance of 50 meters away from the high voltage line might prove important for vehicle drivers and I will be checking this further. It is possible that this distance earmarks the start of zones where the energy begins to disperse and is less intense.

The 3D etheric raster creates charges of static electricity. This can be proved by many experiments, which are described on my web pages www.miroslavprovod.com. Such experiments merely represent a starting point for further research which would need to explore, map and measure zones associated with the greatest electrical charges on the Earth. These exist within sea currents, great rivers and also other zones of constant charge and flux.

It would also be beneficial to investigate, those changes in the etheric raster are caused by the 1800 thunderstorms that are constantly occurring and the effects of the one hundred lightning strikes that discharge every second. These release energy that is equal to the energy that would be released in a small nuclear war. In all there are about three billion lightning strikes that hit the Earth every year with the annual number of thunderstorms around 16 million.

By understanding the subtle nature of planetary energy we can solve those riddles left in the landscape by our forefathers, and apply this knowledge to understand ourselves, the animal and plant kingdoms and work in harmony with the planet.

“The day when science starts to explore nonphysical phenomena will it advance more in a decade than it has advanced over whole centuries of its present existence.”

– Nikola Tesla

Book Review: The Spirit of Portland. Revelations of a Sacred Isle

By Gary Biltcliffe

The Isle of Portland in Dorset is an island steeped in myth and legend. Why was it so important and strategic throughout Britain's history? Does Portland hold the key to an ancient Masonic secret? Was it a major centre of the Druids? Are the island families descended from Phoenicians and Jutes? This fascinating book explores the island's mysteries, its sacred geology and geometry, its ley lines, holy wells, and a giant figure formed from roads and footpaths within its landscape. The use of local traditions and archaeology helps to reveal Portland's special importance to our ancient ancestors, who built a staggering number of stone circles, standing stones and burial mounds. Discover these places and artefacts for yourself with walks that highlight Portland's hidden treasures and their significance with surprises for both locals and visitors. Book Review: Tarot Unveiled

By Gordon Strong

The Tarot is a philosophical document and a gateway to the unseen. Being beyond time, it has the power to reveal the ebb and flow of existence - the divine rhythm. Author Gordon Strong considers that the Tarot has been a key to his life since the 1960s his experience encapsulated in this book, an invaluable guide for the beginner and professional reader alike.

All the cards of the Major and the Minor Arcana are perceptively explained. The book also includes a brief history of the Tarot, an intimate guide to Divination, Tarot Correspondences and Numerology. Tarot meditation exercises are also included. For further information about the book Email Gordon at flashmagic7@yahoo.co.uk or log on to www.gordonstrong.co.uk

On-line Psychic Survey

My name is Rosemary Breen and I am a researcher and parapsychologist. Following on from research conducted whilst based at Monash University in Australia, I am conducting an on-line survey that aims to collate data on the experiences of independent psychic practitioners (and allied professions) and in particular their remote-based activities.

I use the word 'psychic' loosely and it can be taken to encompass all services that are offered with or without the client being present, be that tarot card reading, counselling, numerology, channelling, life coaching, or remote healing. If interested in participating in the study (which only takes 5 minutes to complete) log on to <http://bit.ly/CSFzp>. For any further information about the study please email me at rosemary1803@gmail.com
